SPEAKERS

Richard Bentall: The myth that schizophrenia is a genetic disease

The idea that schizophrenia is an inherited disease has been treated as an axiom rather than a hypothesis throughout the history of psychiatry. Recent expensively funded attempts to find the molecular basis of schizophrenia have been justified by the high heritability coefficient (> 70%) calculated from twin studies. Because this coefficient has been widely misunderstood as a gene/environment causation ratio, high values have been assumed to mean that the causes of schizophrenia are mostly genetic. The only way of establishing whether environmental factors are important is to study them. Recent studies have shown very large effects for a number of environmental influences, including exposure to the urban environment, poverty and social inequality, childhood trauma and exposure to victimisation.

Richard Bentall is Professor of Clinical Psychology at Liverpool University, takes on far too many tasks, and often lets down his friends as a consequence. He has previously held chairs at the universities of Manchester and Bangor, and is the author of Madness Explained (Penguin, 2003) and Doctoring the Mind (Penguin, 2009).

Mick Cooper: Are the facts friendly? Person-centred therapy in an era of 'evidence-based' practice

This presentation will look at the development, status and future of person-centred therapy in relation to the present calls for evidence-based counselling and psychotherapy. It will critically examine the current evidence base for the approach, and discuss some of the key contemporary developments that are attempting to address present limitations. The presentation will also consider some of the key challenges that face the person-centred community in engaging with the field of research and evidence, and how these can be addressed.

Mick Cooper is a Professor of Counselling at the University of Strathclyde and a practising counselling psychologist. He has written and edited a range of books and papers on relational and research-based approaches to therapy, including The Existential Counselling Primer (PCCS Books, 2012) and Pluralistic Counselling and Psychotherapy (Sage, 2011).

Jacqui Dillon: The history and work of the Hearing Voices Network – the personal is still political

The Hearing Voices Network, inspired by the work of Prof Marius Romme, provides hope for thousands of voice-hearers. It promotes an inclusive approach to mental distress, with the idea that in order to truly understand psychosis we must begin by listening to those who know these experiences from the inside out; the voices and narratives of those who have been condemned as 'unanalysable' and mad.

Jacqui Dillon is Chair of Hearing Voices Network, England. She is a writer, campaigner, international speaker, trainer and co-editor (with John Read) of the second edition of Models of Madness (Routledge, 2013).

Stephen Joseph: The positive psychology of the person-centred approach

Over the last decade the new science of positive psychology has transformed the landscape of psychology with its emphasis on well-being, personal growth and human flourishing. While such ideas have been new to many, the person-centred approach has always been a positive psychology. Today, more than ever, person-centred psychology can offer a positive psychological vision for the helping professions.

Stephen Joseph is Professor of Psychology, Health and Social Care at the University of Nottingham. He is co-editor (with Richard Worsley) of Person-Centred Psychopathology: A positive psychology of mental health (PCCS, 2005), Person-Centred Practice: Case studies in positive psychology (PCCS, 2007) and What Doesn't Kill Us: The new psychology of posttraumatic growth (Piatkus, 2013).

Joanna Moncrieff: Mother's little helper: The politics of consumerism and psychoactive drug use

This talk will look at the use of psychoactive drugs through the ages, and draw parallels between the illicit and recreational use of these substances and the use of prescription drugs for mental health problems. The marketing of psychoactive substances by the pharmaceutical industry and their presentation as specific, disease-targeting treatments by the psy professions will be explored, along with the political motivations that demonise self-directed substance use, while promoting paternalistic, medically initiated use.

Joanna Moncrieff is Senior Lecturer at UCL and practising consultant psychiatrist in London. She is Co-chairperson of the Critical Psychiatry Network and author of The Bitterest Pills: The troubling story of antipsychotic drugs (Palgrave, 2013), The Myth of the Chemical Cure (Palgrave, 2009) and A Straight-talking Introduction to Psychiatric Drugs (PCCS Books, 2009).

Clare Shaw: 'I do not believe in silence': How words can change the world

In this session, Clare will draw on a powerful mixture of poetry, testimony and research to tell her own particular story of survival and activism; giving expression to her deepest conviction: that words can change the world for the better.

Clare Shaw is a key figure in the UK self-harm survivor movement. Her work is fuelled by personal, academic and professional experience of self-harm; and by conviction and passion. Clare is also "one of Britain's most dynamic and powerful young poets" (Arvon Foundation), with two acclaimed collections in print: Straight Ahead (2006) and Head On (2012).

Lisbeth Sommerbeck: Rebutting criticisms of person-centred therapy with people diagnosed with psychosis Several popular misconceptions of person-centred therapy will be refuted, including: (1) that person-centred therapy is insufficient or unsuitable for people diagnosed with psychosis, (2) that because person-centred therapy is antithetical to the medical model it cannot be practised in psychiatric settings, and (3) that empathising with, or trying to understand psychotic experience is detrimental to recovery. On the contrary, the positive therapeutic impact of empathic responding in psychotic process will be described.

Lisbeth Sommerbeck is a clinical psychologist accredited as a specialist in psychotherapy by the Danish Psychological Association. She has worked in psychiatric settings for 35 years and is now retired. She has written many journal articles and two books, one in English: The Client-Centred Therapist in Psychiatric Contexts: A therapist's guide to the psychiatric landscape and its inhabitants (PCCS Books, 2003).

Pete Sanders: Towards shared practice

It will not be news for many to hear that Carl Rogers' advocated the demedicalisation of distress over 60 years ago. Contemporary psychological treatments seem to be re-inventing a number of the wheels developed by Rogers in the 1940s and 50s, from research into psychotherapy to the therapeutic potential of human relationships. This talk maps out the co-ordinates of shared practice for the 21st century.

Pete Sanders is a Co-director of PCCS Books. He has been talking and writing about this topic for 35 years, and shows no signs of stopping.
